SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1964

Opt and Aim

PRIME MINISTER PEARSON has announced that legislation will be introduced before the House shortly which will enable provincial governments to contract out of any or all shared programs with the federal government.

The proposed bill undoubtedly will be described by the government as a concrete example of its new philosophy of "co-operative federalism." However it may be seen by others as a dangerous and unwarranted concession to the province of Quebec.

Certainly, whichever view is taken of the bill its introduction will open up a debate in Parliament which could shake the very foundations of the nation.

Nor will the anticipated debate on the planned legislation necessarily run along simple partisan lines. Already numerous members from all parties have expressed their view that in his effort to meet Quebec's demands Mr. Pearson has this time gone too far.

In effect, they say that if this legislation is passed it would result in a fatal weakening of the authority of the central government. However, according to Ottawa reports, Mr. Pearson is prepared to ignore the advice of even some of his senior cabinet ministers and push the matter through the Commons.

Instead of heeding the warnings and misgivings expressed by his own colleagues, Mr. Pearson has apparently chosen to ally himself with Premier Lesage in the belief that the proposed changes will strengthen the nation rather than weaken it.

For his part, the Quebec leader has firmly stated that though Quebec may opt out of joint federal-provincial schemes in future it is not opting out of Canada. Just exactly what Mr. Lesage means by "not opting out of Canada" is difficult to interpret at times.

For instance, he has already declared that of 48 listed federal-provincial shared programs Quebec intends contracting out of 22.

These programs range over a wide variety of subjects including such items as hospital insurance, forest fire protection, technician training, trade and other occupational training, technical and vocational teacher training, old age assistance, unemployment assistance, fitness and amateur sport, urban redevelopment, low rental housing and municipal airports capital projects.

Apart from opting out of these and many other shared programs, the Quebec premier has already notified Ottawa that his province will not take part in any national pension scheme or medicare plan which might be brought in by the federal government.

From his attitude it might appear to many Canadians that Quebec is already well on its way to "opting out of Canada." What Premier Lesage seems to be miming for is the establishment of an independent state within Canada which the dominion government finances but over which it has no authority.

It will be interesting to hear Mr. Pearson's explanation as to how such a development can lend strength to our confederation.

Retaliation?

IT MAY BE sheer coincidence, but the proposal of Finance Minister Walter Gordon to restrict foreign ownership of Canadian financial intsitutions has been quickly followed by U.S. proposals to raise the tariff on the main aluminum imports—supplied largely by Canada's Aluminium Ltd.

Last week, the Senate finance committee recommended that the 11/4 cents a pound basic tariff on unwrought aluminum should be increased for the now popular extrusions of this metal. The committee found that aluminum in this form had processing work done upon it, and because of that it should pay a higher duty.

The U.S. aluminum producers have for some time urged this step, but a few months ago their claim was turned down by the U.S. tariff board. Aluminium Ltd. says the unexpected proposal of Senate committee was to them a bolt from the blue, and that if put into effect it will cripple their $100,000,000 export business. There is no doubt the company will make strong representations to Ottawa for support and Mr. Gordon will once again find himself in the position of having to make representations to Washington.

Can it be that the aluminum issue is deliberately designed to give the U.S. a bargaining position with Mr. Gordon on his plan to restrict foreign control of Canadian financing institutions? It will be remembered that when Mr. Gordon last took steps to restrict the freedom of U.S. capital in Canada, the U.S. retaliated with the Interest Equalization Act—a temporary measure which did much to "put Canada in its place" so far as interference with big brother down south was concerned.

The aluminum tariff could be only the first of various reprisals against Mr. Gordon, and if so the finance minister may again have difficulty in making his most recent plans stick.

Timely Warning

THERE WILL BE a downtown parade tomorrow. Parades are not new to cities, this one included. They are popular events that enliven the civic scene and provide spectator pleasure.

But this one will be different. The firemen engaged won't object to putting on a show—and 12 fire-fighting vehicles of various types behind the navy band should make quite a display—but the parade has a serious purpose. It is to highlight the opening of Fire Prevention Week all across the country.

It will be a concerted reminder by all the fire departments of Greater Victoria and its environs of the distress and damage fire can cause. Both rural and urban departments will take part, to emphasize anew the constant need for vigilance so that calamity of this nature does not strike. In general fires take a heavy toll. Last year the total loss in Canada was the greatest in its history. In monetary terms its value reached an estimated $155,000,000 and in human relation the deaths of 551 men, women and children. It behooves everyone to be on guard against the accurge of fire, therefore. The household should be periodically checked. Electrical systems should be examined against overloading. Faulty appliances corrected. Chimneys swept regularly. Rags and rubbish and combustible materials put beyond harm. And generally a strict lookout kept at all times. Householders know these things by instinct, but human nature being what it is they grow careless. Fire Prevention Week is designed to draw fresh attention to the latest risks always present where fire is concerned.

It has taken a long time to sell us on the worth of the solunar tables we publish regularly in this paper, but the more we study them the more we hecome convinced

We first paid attention to them a couple of years ago when we fished St. Mary Lake for bass with Seth Halton and Bill Hanson. Halton was a pure devotee of the solunar tables and we had to follow them. Sure enough, we did notice more activity among the birds and the fish did become more active during the solunar periods as published in the Colonist. This summer we noted with considerable interest that men who caught most salmon off Sooke also followed the solunar tables acrupulously. We used to hear them . . . Ira Erb, Jumbo Davies and

Rolly Robinson, to mention some . . . shout to each other: "There is a major in half an hour" or "the minor is about to start," and as often as not that was when the fish started The other day we took Robinson's word for a minor period. We went out an hour before and Robinson followed later at the start of the minor period. No sooner than we saw him on the water the sea base started to roll all over place. We grabbed our spinning rod, cast among them and caught a number in no time. Then the bite stopped as auddenly as it had started.

For that reason we became interested in John Aiden Knight's and Richard Alden Knight's recent comments on solunar tables. They are the ones who prepare them for

A great many sportsmen have found that if they plan their days in the open so they can take full advantage of the solunar periods, the quality of their sport improves considerably, they say.

But, unfortunately, not all of the fishermen and hunters are familiar with the solunar tables and know their value to those who enjoy the outdoor sports. They explain that the solunar tables list, for each day of the year in all parts of the world, the activity and feeding periods of all living things. of all living things.

Every living thing responds to the promptings of a solution period. . animals, fish, reptiles, insects, birds, roun plants and flowers, even humans.

Naturally, the degree of response varies considerably with the species and individual, depending upon the order of development, but it is there and easily recognized if you know how to look for it. Far too many people seem to regard the solunar tables being useful only with freshwater fishing. Saltwater fish respond to the solunar periods as well, or in some cases.

er than freshwater fish. Solunar tables can be a big help on hunting trips. Take. for example, ringneck pheasant shooting. A ringneck, being wary creature, spends his time in heavy protective cover when there is no solunar period in progress. Then he is difficult to find and even more difficult to flush. But with the arrival of a solunar period he becomes angry and active and leaves his protective cover to move into the feeding grounds.

The same thing is true of quail and grouse.

Most duck hunters regard a bluebird day as being a bad day for duck shooting. They prefer rough weather. (Duck shooting opens next weekend.)

Generally that is true, but not entirely. On bright, sunny days the ducks are apt to rick-up out over deep water. But let a solunar period come along and the big rafts of ducks gradually will break up into smaller bunches and these will fly to the feeding grounds and come readily to decoys.

For hig game hunting the same general rules hold true.

Between activity periods the game is more apt than not to be hiding. But when a solunar period comes along, the picture changes. Then game is on the move, feeding and walking about. Deer are particularly responsive to solunar

These rules hold good only for undisturbed fish and ne, explain the Knights. Self preservation is the first law of nature and when wildlife is disturbed, especially by humans, they go into hiding until the danger is past and

The selunar periods are listed as major and minor eriods. The major periods, under good conditions, last two to three hours. When conditions are not entirely averable, the activity is of shorter duration and severely conditions sometimes neutralise completely the effects of the solunar tables.

Don't neglect the minor periods. These are of shorter duration but often you will find the best sports of the day during the minor periods.

TOLEDO, Spain (LAT) - Hollywood has come to Jean Neglesco, who directed Three Coins in the Fountain, just did a color, puff titled The Pleasure Seekers, which is expected to do for Spain what Three Coins did for Italy.

In other words, the tourist invasion has only begun.
Remember what happened to Greece after Never onSunday? The tourists are still crowding in.

Toledo, the walled city outside Madrid which El Greco immortalized, is under seige again, this time by the tourist. The last time it was the Loyalist forces during the Spanish Civil War.

Long busses loaded with Germans and Frenchmen.
Spaniards and Americans groan through narrow cobbled streets to reach the rosy yellow city that roosts high on its granite perch, surrounded on three sides by the muddy Tagus.

Guide book salesmen have invaded its streets, its churches and the famed Alcazar, not to mention the home of El Greco.

Down the hill at a gift shop beside Toledo's famed cathedral the owner told us, "Senor, thees shop does not take you to the cleers." As a matter of fact, no one in Spain has tried to take us to the cleaners, a truth we find refreshingly satisfying.

Toledo's cathedral, begun in 1246 and completed 266 years later, rests on 88 massive pillars and displays an array of ancient robes worn by religious leaders plus a treasury of lewels.

While the Jewish community of Toledo made its exit in the 15th century, the synagogue in which members worshipped still stands and tourists are attracted by Hebrew inscriptions carved into the walls more than 600 years ago.

A short distance away in the small church of Santo Tome hangs El Greco's masterpiece, The Buriai of the Count of Orgaz. It nearly made the trip to the World's Fair in New York. Only the hue and cry of critics protesting the peeling of the painting from the wall saved it.

Stores of Toledo are filled with such trinkets as a suit of armor selling for $2,500. Or they have switchbiade knives for the child majoring in juvenile delinquency. And $35 will get you a stainless steel dinnerware set equipped with gold-plated handles.

Toledo's streets, in places, are so narrow not even an automobile can pass. Grilled balconies lace the ancient buildings and the heat of midday hangs heavy on acada trees rooted in its choked alleys.

Above the city during the civil war-2,000 Nationalists locked themselves inside the Alcazar.

During the long bombardment by Loyalist forces, the Alcazar was almost totally destroyed. Nationalist Col. Jose Moscardo and his garrison held out for 72 days.

They refused surrender, even after the enemy telephoned, warning that Col. Moscardo's teen-age son, being held as a hostage, would be shot. The telephone conversation between father and son is recorded on the walls of the Alcazar:

Son: Hello Father.

Col. Moscardo: What's happening son? Son: Well, they say they will shoot me if you do not surrender.

Col. Moscardo: Then turn your thoughts to God . . . cry out . . . Long Live Spain, and die like a patriot.

Son: All my fondest love Father.

Col. Moscardo: All mine to you,
Then Col. Moscardo spoke to the Loyalist commander advising him, "You needn't waste the time limit you have set as the Alcazar will never be surrendered."
And so the boy died.

Love those new Polly Pecks! . . .

We know several smart young things who fell in love with the spring and summer Polly Peck dresses from England... at the Madam and Eve Shop... and have been waiting with baited breath to see what the fall collection had to offer... Well girls, the new Polly Pecks are here now, and they're great!... These young English designers have come up with English and French schoolgir! looks... which appear demure as all get-out, but are actually anything but... One dress, which comes in a green, blue or brown heathery mixture weel, has high empire bodice, long skinny sleeves. A-line skirt and little round pique collar... A black wool number, also with white collar, has a row of shiny buttons marching down the front... So much for the English school girl look... The French school girl is exemptified in a grey, blue or cinnamon wool, double-breasted effect, white Cheisea collar... This also has long sleeves and A-line skirt... Looks smashing on! The gal who modelled it for us wore the grey one... with black textured stockings... A resi fun dress is the green or pluk wool... wool fringe circling neckline, short sleeves and skirt bottom!... You know how men are . . . wait until they're almost threadbare before taking action . . . and so they often miss out on really good buys . . . Wilson's Towner Club suits are a good buy at any time of the year . . . but especially so right now because they're in the midst of their semi-annual promotion . . . which means the suit is tailored to measure . . . instead of being bought "off the rack" as it is at other times of the year . . . Wilson's have about 60 boits of fine English cloths in a variety of shades, patterns and textures . . The man selects those be fancies . . has the cloth draped on him to get the general effect, decides on the styles he wants, and is measured by Wilson's tailors . . . The suit is then tailored by one of Canada's leading specialists . . . finished off by Wilson's . . . and all for a mere $4.95! . . . There's no doubt about it, it's the men's clothing value of the season . . and since this tailored-to-measure special is only the season ... and since this tailored-to-measure special is only on for a couple more weeks, the time to go and see about getting one is now ... For sheer femininity ... luxurious warmth ... outrageous flattery ... there's nothing to beat the wonderful wrapped-infur look! ... We don't need to tell you that our Canadian furs are the finest in the world ... particularly our Canada mink which is world renowned ... And if you'd like to see a really distinguished collection of mink stoles, capes and fickets ... styled with flair and finesse ... do go look at Scuby's collection ... We venture to say there isn't anything finer in Western Canada! ... Every shade you can think of ... dark, pastel, violet, sapphire, pearl, lavender, palomino ... you name it, Scuby's have it ... the stoles, caplets and jackets are magnificent! ... Six hundred years earlier Peter the Hermit spoke in similar terms:

"The world is passing through troubled times. The young people of today think of nothing but themselves. They have no reverence for parents or old people. They are impatient of all restraint. They talk as if they alone knew anything, and what passes as wisdom in us is foolishness to them. As for girls they are forward, immodest and unwomanly in speech, behavior and dress.

DESPAIRING Three thousand years before that a man contemplating suicide in Egypt's middle kingdom wrote these melancholy lines "To whom can I speak today? The gentleman has perished, and the violent man has access to everybody. The iniquity that slights the land - it has no end. There are no righteous men. The earth is surrendered to criminals."

some are growing slack and critical in the moral dimensions of their lives, others are bringing new meaning and vitality to CONSTANT FIGHT

Each generation, Gardner points out, has to rediscover "the words on the monuments": Justice - Liberty, and so on. The moral order, that is, is not some thing static, it is a living, changing thing. It is always, at the same time subject to decay and disintegration and to renewal and reinforcement.

Each generation must fight again the crucial battles which will rescue the old ideals from decay, and restore them to new vitality in their own time.

Men and women who understand this truth are able to look upon society and contemplate both its evil and its good and keep their proportions clear. They are not filled with foolish hopes, but they do not give way

And above all they understand that the issue in each generation depends partly upon themselves.

Scents Under Glass

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS SCENTED PLANTS FOR GREEN-

HOUSE (W.E.O'K., Victoria)-Some good plants to provide rich fragrance in your heated greenhouse would be Exacum affine, Mignonette, Stocks and Humea elegans, all of which can be grown from seed. Hyacinth bulbs and Freesia corms can both be potted up now and are sweetly scented.

There are some interesting possibilities, also, in plants with scented foliage. A good one with a most refreshing fragrance is the Lemonscented Verbena (Lippia citriodora) and there is a whole range of houseplant geraniums with fragrant leaves -lemon-scented, mint-scented, rosescented and apple-scented, IVY FROM SLIPS (L.S., Royal Oak) October is a good month to start ivy outdoors from cuttings. Remove the lower leaves, moisten the base of the slip, dip it in a hormone rooting powder. then insert to one-third of its length in sandy, well-drained soil with a bit of peat moss added. The young vines may be transplanted to their permanent site in October, 1965.

Although I couldn't guarantee it would survive, I think your best bet would be Japanese spurge, Pachysandra terminalis. This is a shrubby plant growing a little less than a foot tall, bearing thick, glossy foliage and spreading fairly rapidly by under ground runners. It tolerates acid soil and some shade but it would need a reasonable amount of light and an occasional deep watering. Plants are available from local nurseries for $3.50 per dozen.

CHINESE CLEMATIS (T.S.McQ., Victoria) - Your vine with yellow lantern-shaped blossoms and silver whiskery seeds is Clematis tangutica, the Chinese clematis. This vine is pruned in late February or early March, cutting back all new growth to with two buds of the previous year's wood. The silvery seed heads are much prized by floral art devotees for adding character and distinction to bowl and dish arrange-

Dance Partners Never Speak, Never Touch

Oddities Do Doo Waddy Doo

By ART SEIDENBAUM, from Los Angeles

The string orchestra began to play. Two sun-blond musicians harmonized to the love song: Doo waddy doo, waddy doo doo doo.

A man and woman danced. He, in his Bermuda shorts. She, smothered in an orange serape. They did not speak. At the typically attenuated conclusion of Doo waddy doo, they just stood there, still not talking to each other. Neither of them applauded; in fact, none of the dancers applauded. It must be bad form. Undaunted, the orchestra launched into La la la.

The two strangers danced again. Never touching. never acknowledging the other's presence except with their eyes. They stared at each other the way some former cultures gazed at a motor or piece of machinery: most impressed with the way it operates, not at all sure how the moving parts move that way.

When the third dance was done, they separated with grins so small the two of them would have to be combined to make a half-smile. They did not thank each other for the dance.

Moments later, they were back on the floor. But not together. He, with a new stranger in metallic capris. She, with a man who wore denim pants and a turtle-neck

The place is called Gazzarri's, a pioneer stomping ground; the local place where the swim, frog, monkey. pony (these are all dances) jiggled into prominence.

You can see them on the sidewalks waiting for space Gazzarri's. They are a young crowd, girls who look like the Beatle fans, men who don't have to shave every day. At the door, a large, mature man checks the crowd, somewhat surprised to find that so many of the custo are really 21.

Oddly, almost as odd as the dance steps themselves, this doesn't look to be a pickup centre. Couples form for Doo waddy doo and then dissolve.

Feet, one notices, are not quite so important to the modern dance. Hips and hands and neck bones do more. A gogoer, for instance, may plant her shoes firmly on the floor and let everything above them run wild. Scholars have compared the new dances to pagan fertility rites; possibly, they have been over-profound. More like the hula, the present American folk dances seem to tell a

In the course of one evening, I saw several gestures repeated in several clubs. One of them looks like a phone call, with the man apparently holding an instrument to his ear.

There are a whole series of hunting, fishing and arching pantomimes. The swim, of course, is done freestyle. Twice, I noticed couples shadow boxing in the

And once, I marvelled at a pretty blonde who seemed to be gargling as she danced - head thrown back and shalding, mouth wide open, a phantom glass in her hand.

Whether a place is a discotheque (music out of a stereo can) or features live performers or a combination of both, the sounds are nearly identical. Lots of drum, multiple twangers and unison chanting. Most often uptempo. Always heavy on the decibels.

The performers are about as confusing as department store Santa Clauses: apparently identical because of the an disguise. If you didn't know better, with their spaniel hairdos and hound-dog voices, it might seem as though the same strummers were appearing simultaneously all over town.

The terrible truth is that I envy this generation. They can substitute for affection with remote control. They have things going for them that I didn't know the rest of us owned, even in our primes. I believe I've new seen manipulative medicine carried to its farthest limits. The individual release is incredible.

Little World of SHEILAH GRAHAM Disaster Queen-Size

HOLLYWOOD (NANA)-Ex-Queen Soraya is shedding some ex-royal tears. All those four weeks in Greece for her very first experience as a movie star, in Three Faces of Love, are, according to reports from Rome, going into an ashcan. In brief, the word from Rome is that the entire month's work must all be reshot. And what makes the situation even more dreadful is that co-star Bichard Harris is in neither the mood nor the money to spend another four weeks on the picture. Producer Dino de Laurentiin will have to use a large piece of his famed powers of persuasion. I'm sorry for Soraya. But perhaps she should have tried another prolession for her first attempt at working.

Manager Brian Epstein is still in shock from the $10,000,000 offer he received for his 25 per cent share of the Beatles. From a syndicate of seven American businessmen. Of course he said no. He can make as much from the shaggy quartette in two years and still own a quarter of the biggest gold mine of our day.

Rock Hudson and Marilyn Maxwell certainly didn't look like ex-friends when she hostened his first big party for charity the other eve. But they began as good chums. And that's how they will end . . . And it seems to be true that, after his next picture for Universal. Rock will make movies only for his own company . . . And it is also true that his ex-wife Phyllis is still collecting on every picture he makes. A thing like that can sour a man on another marriage.

Pameia Curren's agent believes she would make a good Jean Harlow—for 20th Century-Fox. Joe Levine's Jean by the way, with Carroll Baker, will not start until December. The script has to be finished, and the rest of the cast assembled. Joe has asked Vistorio Gassman to play the father. He'd have to use strong make-up seeing that Carroll is 33 and Vittorio is only 40.

THE ERA of the HORSE

THE VIOLENT YEARS

Without His Help Men Would Have Failed to Build the Nation

GUY BLANCHET Writes Nostalgically of THE ERA of the HORSE

Look at our automobiles and airplanes and power machines that have freed the horse from heavy labor and man from the pick and shovel. And speed! Who would want to go back to six miles an hour with a horse when motor traffic is speeding at sixty?

Well . . . in his day the horse played a pretty important part both in the city, farm and frontier country, in war and in pageant. It is not curious that today we reckon in horsepower. The unit was the ability of a powerful horse to lift 33,000 pounds one foot in one minute. There are records in desert freighting of 20 horses hauling heavily-loaded vehicles ... 20 horsepower. It is impossible to imagine 1,000 horses united in a single task or a driver who could control them.

When I look back to Ottawa in the 80s, When I look back to Ottawa in the 80s, horses played an essential part in everyday life. Although most people walked of necessity, transportation was handled by horses, delivery of milk and bread, coal and ice. Few streets were macadamized, none paved. In summer they were dusty, in spring and autumn deep in mud, and with snow in winter. Traffic was light. The clop clop of summer and aleigh bells in winter scarcely broke the rural quiet through which we might hear the distant roar of the Chaudiere Falls.

Horses like people fell into classes. There

Horses, like people, tell into classes. There were the well-groomed carriage horses hauling elegant vehicles. A poor relation was the call horse (forerunner of the taxi). They occupied where they and their drivers waited for customers to employ them for special services by which the horse earned his oats and his master his bread.

Who could forget the fire horses? Few people had telephones, and alarms were sent from street corner boxes. They were repeated by the bell at the city hall tolling its location number: 1-74 . . . Corner King and Queen St. There was excitement. From the fire station finely kept horses dashed out . . . three blacks nnely kept horses dashed out . . . three blacks hauling the engine trailing its plume of smoke . . . the hook and ladders with a fireman ringing a hand bell . . . the hose wagon. A fire might mean tragedy for someone but it brought life to firemen and their horses and excitement to children and does. It might be excitement to children and dogs. It might be a false alarm and horses, firemen, children and dogs returned dejectedly.

Horses played an important part in funerals with the impressive hearse and long train of carriages of all kinds. I remember the funeral of Sir John MacDonald as it made its way slowly and solemnly through the heart of the where all other traffic had been stopped. and behind the horse with reversed boots.

Cavalry made an impressive sight, their uniformed riders in plumed helmets and bear-

The horse was as essential for a doctor as his little black bag of tricks. He travelled his rounds with his gig in summer and sleigh in winter. On his calls the horse, secured by the "weigh," stood patiently while the doctor, unhurried, examined and treated his patients. The horse might gallop if the call was urgent, more often not. The horse was as well known he the doctor himself and people could judge from his speed something of what was hap-pening to their neighbors.

The doctor played an important part be-iween birth and death. His office was the parlor of his house and his house was stabled in his back yard. Few had telephones. His patients had to call in person or hall him as he drove his rounds. The passing of the house came with the motor car for speed, the tele-phone for contact and the downtown comulting room for convenience.

The canal horse following a towpath hauling barges has long since disappeared but he was still used at that time. The plodding horse, the barges and his family living in the after casin made a homely sight. The canal horse was a member of the family.

The sturdy farm horse joined with his master in planting and reaping, and he had his relaxation in the pasture and stable, smelling pleasantly of hay, horse and leather. Transportation on country roads was often only possible with horses.

About the turn of the century a new con-trivance became popular—the bicycle. This lifted pedestrians off their feet and to a certain extent was the point of the wedge intro-ducing mechanical transportation. In earliest form was a large wheel with direct pedal form was a large wheel with direct pedal driver and a small wheel trailer. Soon this was followed by the two-wheel "safety," with geared drive. Dignified gentlemen in knicker-bockers and ladies in "divided skirts," united in accepting the bicycle and used their influence in the demand for better roads both in town and country which prepared the way for a more important competitor of the horse. There was one cross-town track on which a car hauled by horses carried pedestrians from the sawmills at the Chaudiere, through the city, past the Parliament Buildings and on to Rockliffe Park, assisting business, the sight-seer and pleasure seeker. The driver handled his team from the front platform and could his team from the front platform and could reach a speed of four miles an hour. But the day of the horse-car was ended with the advent of electric trams. Electricity had already replaced the lamp lighter with his little ladder. With the new century, the power of gasoline and electricity was increasingly replacing the horse. The change had significance in people and the way they lived. Travel was simpler, distant places more accessible. The pedestrian who had welcomed the bicycle eagerly accepted the motor car with a spec of thirty miles an hour.

From the start it was apparent that streets and roads based on home travel were inadequate. Until good roads were provided the horse held his own. They could carry on through floods and blizzards but with the presence for improved roads for motor vehicles, sure for improved roads for motor vehicles, the horse was pushed off to the farm and to the side roads.

The eastern horse had been introduced from Europe and to a certain extent standard breeds were preserved. The horse of the Western Plains originated from those brought Western Plains originated from those brought from Spain to Mexico. Descendants from these strayed and in the course of several conturies, bands of wild horses migrated northward through the central plains and the foothills of the Rockies. Many were captured by Indians and domesticated, trained as saddle horses and to carry loads. Through inbreeding and their rugged life they became smaller but also hardler in meeting conditions of the wilderness.

The most extreme case of dwarfing is the little horse about the size of a large dog found in the mile-deep Grand Canyon of Colorade River.

When the traders reached the western plains they found the Indians well supplied with horses known as cayuses, which they used in hunting and as pack horses in their wandering life. They still had the herding instinct and ranged as bands, accepting their-master's camp as temporary home. The natives had no knowledge of the wheel but used their teepee poles as a travois, attached to the horse and trailing on the ground. The trader secured horses from the Indians and introduced supplies across the plains in convosus to duced supplies across the plains in conve their forts their forts.

It was not until 1870 when the federal government threw open the newly-purchased holdings of the Hudson's Bay Company to settlers that the castern horse arrived on the western plains. Settlers brought their horses with them, accustomed to farm work, especially important in breaking the tough prairie sod. Changes came ramidly to the western sod. Changes came rapidly to the western plains. Surveyed roads replaced two-rutted

Premier Bennett's grandiose dream of the Yukon and Northwest Territories becoming part of British Columbia, if it comes true, would mean the linking of two of the most famous railways in North America - British Columbia's longtime magnificent white elephant and political football, the Pacific Great Eastern, and the famed White Pass and Yukon, which runs 20 miles in Alaska, 32 miles in British Columbia and 58 miles in the Yukon Territory.

If the Yukon ever does join British Columbia and Premier Bennett is still at the helm, he, no doubt, will take over the White Pass Railway and make it part of the PGE — thus having a railway running from Vancouver 800 miles to Fort St. John, another 900 to Whitehorse (this stretch is one of the premier's promised goodies to Yukoners if they join B.C.), and then down through the mountain passes 110 miles to Shagway - back to Pacific Ocean waters once more. What a dream of empire come true, and it could

The PGE has been through the fires of heated political debate in our legislature and on the hunstings. It became a joke. It has been called nasty, cynical names, such as "Papa's Greatest Effort," "Please Go Easy," and "Prince George Eventually."

More than once a B.C. premier has attempted to sell it, or pretended to, but nobody would buy it. After Pearl Harbor, President Franklin D. Roosevelt became interested in it, and he sent his daughter, Anna, then Mrs. John Boetigger, living in Seattle, and his Uncle Fred Delano, to visit Premier John Hart to see what could be done with the PGE as a link between the United States proper and the link between the United States proper and the then territory of Alaska.

Premier Hart wasn't really too anxious to sell, he, like Premier Bennett, enjoying his role of railway boss; he liked talking with Mrs. Boetigger, however, and she, tall and fair and good looking, once gave a press conference in the premier's office, sitting on the premier's big desk and showing pretty ankles, which the premier appreciated. And so did And so did which the premier appreciated, the reporters.

It was in the middle of the 1914-18 war that the PGE, started by private enterprises, who went broke, collapsed into the government's unwilling lap. Premier Sir Richard McBride, much against his will, found himself trying to complete and run a railway. Thus it was the PGE landed up to its neck in politics. For a time the government of the day forgot all about the PGE, and ties rotted and rails

The Liberals, under Premier John Oliver, decided the PGE was worth rescuing, but it languished for lack of funds, and kept costing the province more and more until no-one, even today, could possibly say how many millions the taxpayers have been forced by successive governments to pour into it. The present government says that it's now making money, or at least paying its own way.

For years the PGE ran from nowhere to nowhere, as everyone said—from Squamish to Quesnel. It was Liberal-Coalition Premier Byron Johnson who extended the PGE from Quesnel to Prince George, but he was defeated when the first train got there, and so it was Premier Bennett who rode in glory into Prince George, to be greeted by the plaudits of the delerious populace. Then Mr. Bennett sent the PGE north and east, into the Peace River country, with terminals at Dawson Creek and Fort St. John.

Now, says our Premier, if the Yukon will British Columbia he'll send the PGE all the way to Whitehorse, and there it will connect with the much more historic White Pass Railroad, whose most noted presi-and I must say the scenery's magnificent. To think these two railways may be linked stirs the imagination no end. The call of the north is still siren strong and bewitching as ever.

The White Pass Railway was built by British capital. It was decided upon in a great hurry when the gold rush started in earnest in August of 1896, after minor rushes for some years previously. By July of 1898 the White Pass Railway was operating, as we see in The Colonist: "ALASKA'S FIRST ENGINE—The first locomotive that ever moved a wheel in Alaska pulled out of Skagway last week with a string of flat cars. The moving marked another great epoch of improvement in the great northern territory.

"For several miles the pioneer locomotive found rails stretched out before it, and as soon as a bridge is completed the distance that can be covered will be considerably increased.

"There was no ceremony over the event. A few of Skagway's business men gathered to see the engine start out, and as she puffed up the grade on Broadway, and out into the valley there was a rush to see the novelty, but that was all. Skagway people have not been so long away from civilization that the workings of a comotive excite them."

The crews worked 24 hours a day, for this is the land of the midnight sun, and around midnight, for about two hours is their dusk: "Fifteen hundred men are working as fast as they possibly can to push the road along. Win-ter, with its blizzards, will soon be fast approaching, and then work will be even more difficult

The toughest work was yet to come: "The easiest part of the road has now been graded. From this point, to which the roadbed is now completed, to Shallow Lake, on the other side of the summit, every foot of the way will be through solid rock. Two small-tunnels will be

Shortage of labor was a constant headache: The railway company says it will give employment to as many more men as it can find. The company has now six established camps, and is employing several hundred teams of

In August of 1898 prominent Victorian Harry Dallas Helmcken, Q.C., was invited by the railway company to go north and have a look at the new road, and he returned filled with enthusiasm.

The Colonist reported: "Mr. speaks of the management of the line as both capable and courteous to a marked degree. Mr. Helmcken reports it is a well-built road, despite the immense engineering difficulties."

There was always the labor shortage, for men would sign on with the railway company and then, hearing news of a new gold strike they'd rush off: "Six survey parties are at present in the field—or, to put it more accurately, in the mountains. The great difficulty facing the builders of the road is shortage of their picks and shovels and joined the rush to Tagish Lake. They, could no longer resist the temptation to follow at the beck of gold."

Michael J. Heney was contractor for the White Pass Road and he was known in the northland as "The Irish Prince," and "Big Mike." In January of 1899 he and his chief engineer, Robin B. Jack, came to Victoria and announced "20 miles of their road have now been graded, the last two or three miles in Canadian territoroy, and 18 miles of track in Canadian territoroy, and 18 miles of track have been laid, and that by the end of May the

For the Lover of Winter Sun And the Dedicated Golfer

When last winter we decided to spend a holiday in the Caribbean, Stan Mooney, Air Canada's manager here, said one of the things I should do was to take my golf clubs, and golf being what it is to me, I needed no coaxing.

WEST INDIES BECKON

So while golf was not the main reason for our exploratory visit to the West Indies we were in search of sun and warmth-we were not there very long before we realised that golf was indeed a very important part of a holiday in those tropical isles.

Indeed I would go as far as to say that those in search of something new in golf, and in golf architecture, should certainly try out the West Indies, and particularly Jamaica and the Bahamas.

Within the past few years champion-ship standard courses have been laid out that are making the sunny islands of the Caribbean a golfer's Mecca, in addition to their other winter vacation lures.

Famous golf architects, Robert Trent Jones, Howard Watson, John Harris and Dick Wilson, internationally known, have produced extraordinarily fine testing courses out of the coral and various clays

Remarkably, all this has been done in the space of the past five or six years.

These new courses—one of them more than 7,200 yards long—are a far cry from the old "links" laid out by lonely Scottish or English sugar planters who cut a few holes out of the jungle to remind them of home.

The new courses have been constructed mainly by U.S. land developers at tremendous expense, and probably as a gimmick to sell adjacent land they have tied up for subdivision.

Last winter I paid a visit to two of the leading golf areas of the Caribbean, Jamaica and the Bahamas. Playing half a dozen of these new courses was a delightful and enlightening experience, but so long and so exacting were they that it was easier to go round them in 80 degrees (temperature) than in 80 shores.

To the Canadian one of the most interesting features of Caribbean golf is the number of Canadians holding position as professionals or green superintendents. Most of them winter in the south—lucky fellows—and return home to eastern Canada in time for the opening of the new season there, usually sometime in Man.

In Jamaica, I played the famous Tryall course—acene of one of the Wonderful World of Golf television aeries—with Phil Laliberte, whose Canadian club is Grey Rocks near Montreal.

At Nassau in the Bahamas, Jack Kay of Pinegrove. Montreal, is the pro at Lyford Cay, the fabulous haunt of millionalres and socialities under the guardian angelship of Canada's E. P. Taylor. Jack was much in the public eye this summer as he acted as host pro to the Canadian Open Championship at Pine-grove. I enjoyed a round with him over this superbly kept Trent Jones course which he shot in a finely executed 69.

Another young Canadian who is making a name for himself in the Bahamas is Bob

Roger, pro at the par 3 Montagu Beach course in Nassau. He rums a weekly clinic that is well attended, and is one of the best putters I have seen for a long time. Bob is a Vancouver boy, who played out of Quilchens, and was runner up in the B.C. junior championship and an alternate for the Willingdom up the proper turning me by going to Banft as team before turning pro by going to Banff as assistant to Malcolm Tapp. When he left there he was succeeded by Victoria's Dicky Munn. Roger's fine reputation as a teacher has won him a summer job as pro at one of the Boston

Many people may think that golf in the 80s—temperature, I mean—would be uncomfortably warm, but this not the case. Trade winds blow almost all day, and provided light cotton clothes are worn they provide zephyrlike relief from the heat of the sun. On the other hand they are just strong enough make them a test for the golfer.

Most northern golfers encountering the prevailing Bermuda-bent grass for the first time run into difficulties until they discover

The grass is wiry and the ball off the fairway must be hit cleanly—a fat shot goes nowhere. The rough is for tigers only, and those of lesser feline breeds are well advised to keep out of it.

But it is on the greens that the greatest problem for the inexperienced arises. Bermuda problem for the inexperienced arises. Bermuda bent has a stubbornly determined grain. Even after rounds of experience I found it very difficult to hit the uphill putt, against the grain, hard enough to reach the hole. On the other hand a downhill putt with the grain is almost unstoppable. Placing the approach to the sloping greens is therefore of utmost importance. However, the greens are usually with excellent surfaces, and the properly hit putt will pop willingly into the hole.

In little more than three hours a TCA jet will run you from a polar Toronto (four above will run you from a polar Toronto (four above when we left) to Montego Airport in Jamaica where the thermometer pointed to 84.

The sudden change from the depth of Canada's winter to the tropical sunshine and spice-scented breezes makes for a very favorable first impression of this lovely island.

The enjoyment was heightened when we found our cabana faced on the blue Caribbean and was backed by the antiday wastent fair.

and was backed by the enticing verdant fair-ways of the Half Moon-Rose Hall champion-ship golf course.

Charlie Gihan, our host at the Colony Club, quickly introduced me to Half Moon's secre-tary Brigadier Peter Wreford Brown, whom I quickly identified as the son of one of Eng. land's most famous soccer amateurs, and a one-time friend of mine in the OM Country. I recalled to his son Peter that I had last seen his dad running the line at famed Hampden Park in a Scotland vs. England amateur international many years ago, and when he was in his early 70s.

by HARRY YOUNG

Like most modern courses, the new golf courses in the Caribbean are designed with tees that may be anything up to 120 yards (even more) in length and all on one level for ease of maintenance.

These tees usually have three sets of mark-era championship, regular and short. The difference between the long and short tees over the 18 holes may be well over 1,000 yards. At Lyford Cay in the Bahamas it is actually 1,330 yards; at Tryall in Jamaica 600 yards, and at Half Moon-Rose Hall it is 1,130 yards.

The alternatives offered make it possible for long or short hitters to enjoy their game by selecting the tees most suited to their hitting ability.

Half Moon, some eight miles cast of Montego Bay, is a course only two years old. It was laid out by Trent Jones and the length was laid out by Trent Jones and the length of the tees makes tremendous differences to the playing of each hole. The short fifth 112 yards from the front tee and 212 yards from the back is played into the "trade winds" and is anything from a full drive to a No. 9.

It was on this magnificently young course that I had the pleasure of playing with Ellis Knowles, former president of the U.S. Senior Golfers' Association, from Apawamis, Rye, New Jersey, and Neil King, who heads the New York syndicate that built the Half Moon resort and course. resort and course.

Knowles is a wonderfully young looking 78, and he certainly does not play like it. He 78, and he certainly does not play like it. He went around this tough circuit—using the middle tees, 5,695 yards—in one stroke for every year of his age. This highly unusual feat, that of playing to your age, he had never accomplished before, and it was the first time I had played a round with anyone who had. Knowles was amazing. On the long par four holes against the wind he was almost invariably home in two shots.

Two days later I played with Knowles again. This time he said, "Let us play off the championship tees," and I knew what he was after. He was wanting to repeat his feat on a 7.143 yards course. The extra 600 yards was a little too much for him, but he was around in 81, which I believe was an even greater

For Canadians, a Welcome Change

PART OF THE FAMOUS Tryall Golf Course in Jamaica, with Round Hill, easily identifiable in the middle distance, where the Duke of want ed to stay, and the homes of millionaires surrounding it. In far distance the Trelawny Hills, slopping down to Montego Bay, reputed to possess the finest bathing beach in all the Caribbean.

The Half Moon-Rose Hall club, like most of those in Jamaica, has been laid out of an old sugar plantation, Rose Hall, from which it gets the second part of its name. Sugar plantations are chosen for golf courses in Jamaica because they were usually sited on good fertile land and with suitable terrain.

The Rose Hall plantation was one of the best on Jamaica, and it was also the one with the most horrible reputation. In its lurid past it had an owner, Anne Palmer, the White Witch of Rose Hall. Anne's beauty and wealth were legendary. She drew men to her from far and wide, and three of her four husbands she killed as soon as she was tired of them. The fourth, a Scot, is reported to have learnt his lesson and when he believed Anne was cooling towards him, he himself killed Anne as a defensive measure. In addition to her physical charms, Anne practised witchcraft, and this, along with a viciously wielded whip, kept her terrified slaves in subjection.

It is reputed that where the 11th green at Half Moon-Rose Hall now stands was a clear-ing to which Anne sent her slaves to die when they were too sick to work, and there—saving buriel chores—the ever present buzzards cleaned off the flesh, leaving only the bare

His toughness and accept ance of his master's life made him invaluable where roads were scarce and poor and natural feeding conditions tested his endurance.

The cayuse was admirably suited to provide transport for surveyors on the plains. This life of constant travel was what he was accustomed to. On the open prairie he needed no road and could forage a living. He could haul light transport on primitive roads in the woodlands and where muskegs had to cross on corduroy and streams forded or crossed by primitive bridges, and rivers must be swum and his load rafted. When the democrat, successor to the Red River cart, had to be aban-doned, the cayuse accepted a life that he had been accustomed to as a pack horse. In much of the north country survey was only possible with the help of horses. Comparatively little work was involved opening a trail through the woodlands. He was wise in picking his way on the lightly brushed trails.

One of the last important uses of the horse was on the two new transcontinental railways; the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern. Sealing Captain's Daughter Recalls

A sharp ear for the incongruous netted me a couple of gems in the past few weeks—the sort of thing that occasionally proves up Vic-

First, an interested lady phoned me as a result of the George Hardy bit (Islander, Aug. 23) to say that George, a labor union pioneer, was still alive in England, his seven children and five published books all doing well. When she recalled his departure for Russia for his famous talk with Lenin, I asked what he was doing then.

"Working for the city," she said, "collecting garbage."

The next was dropped by motherly Mrs. Harold Sweeney who, in talking over the past, paused reflectively, then came up with this quiet but off-beat announce-

"You know," she said, "I once saw a man keelhauled."

Married now forty-odd years, Eva Marie Jacobson, as she was, has the sea in her blood. Never far from salt water in her life, frequently she lived on it. Daughter of a sallor, as a child she scampered the decks of her dad's schooners. It was natural she should marry a sailor, one who served in peace and war, and today is pilotage officer Capt. Harold

Which, I suppose, also accounts for the fact that the front windows of their home at 1657 Hollywood Crescent are but a biscuit toos from the rocky shoreline of Juan de Fuca strait.

Eva's father was Viktor Jacobson who died Eva's father was Viktor Jacobson who died here 15 years ago at the age of 90. A one-time farm boy on an island in the Gulf of Finland (though of Swedish parentage) he was one of the breed whom Alan Villiera, in 1934, referred to in his classic "Last of the Windships." Returning to Mariehama from the Australian grain race, some of the young foremast hands, he noted, didn't bother to return to their parathy homes. They know if they turn to their nearby homes. They knew if they did they'd be put to work on the farm!

"Life to them is so hard," wrote Villers, "that even a Cape Horn voyage must be a holiday." This in 1934! Imagine what it was holiday." This in 1934! Imagine what it was like in the early seventies when 13-year-old Viktor went to sea at 13 as a cook's helper on a barquentine at $3 a month. By the time he got back after a year and a half's absence he'd not only seen New York, the Carolinas and the Azores, but had fallen off a bowsprit in the Gulf of Finland, been in a collision at sea, through a couple of hurricanes, and been adrift for three days, without water, on a raft in mid-Atlantic!

Cruel as the Sea

It was when he was 19, rawboned and pow-erfully built, that one day he met "Red" Hafer on Helsinki's waterfront: Only they called it Helsingfors then. Hafer was a German, skip-per of a 500-ton tops'l schooner needing hands for a voyage to London then South Africa. A sadistic brute, his character was soon revealed when a couple of apprentices upset at a Baltic mooring buoy and Hafer heedlessly went on and let them drown.

It was in the days before the Kiel Canal when ships went 'round the Skaggerack and as the bull-necked Hafer crowded the canvas to claw off the formidable shore, he distributed kicks and blows indiscriminately. tributed kicks and blows indiscriminately. Finally, nearing the coast of England, young Jacobson was sole witness when Hafer killed the mate with a skull-crushing belaying pin, then slung the body overboard.

It was while they were tied up at a London dock that Jacobson sought an opportunity to get ashore and tell some official what he had seen. Hafer intercepted him, first threatening, then cajoling, finally weeping. At last he tried bribery, offering the young sailor £20 to keep his mouth shut.

Finally Jacobson did get ashore, but when the police arrived Hafer had disappeared. Probably to turn up in the south seas black-birding with Bully Hayes—who knows?

It was the next year that Viktor Jacobson again had occasion to discreetly alip ashore: This time from the City of Quebec at Victoria, B.C., where he promptly headed for the hills, or more particularly the Cedar Hill district where he not only looked for farm work but occasionally perched on Mount Douglas to note when the City of Quebec departed without him.

From the farm it was soon back to sea, in Capt. Spring's sealing schooner Favorite, and later he became mate in the Mary Ellen.

His Own Ship

First ship of his own came eight years later, the Mountain Chief, and with an Indian crew he made some fair catches in northern waters. The day he married Minnie McLean he launched her namesake, the Minnie, a 50ton schooner.

It was in the Minnie and too close to Alaskan territory that he was one day over-taken by the U.S. cutter Rush, and his skins seized along with all his spears. A lieutenant was left aboard to see he put in to the nearest Alaskan port.

That evening, when the Rush was over the horizon, skipper Jacobson gravely mentioned to the lieutenant that it would only be by the grace of God that he could prevent his Clayoquot braves from murdering the stranger who was spoiling their season. Best thing to do, suggested Jacobson, was to let them continue sealing. The alarmed lieutenant agreed. Curious to relate a fresh supply of spears appeared. After a few weeks of successful sealing (in which the lieutenant often lent a hand) finally the Minnie was speeding south. She could speed, too. She could log 1,100 miles in seven days.

It was either on this occasion, or on another when he slipped away from Russian seizure, that word of his sporting attitude seizure, that word of his sporting attitude reached Victoria and international law took a hand. Took such a hand that one morning when he reached his vessel he found the sheriff in charge, and the Minnie up for Later when Victoria's hard-bitten sealing fraternity gathered to hear the auctioneer call for an opening bid there was singularly little response. In fact nary a bid. As Jacobson looked on with a sense of warm appreciation, suddenly a stranger bid $600. In the silence that followed Jacobson upped it $50.

Somehow the stranger caught the at-mosphere and held his tongue. Jacobson got his $10,000 ship back for $650.

Jack London could have done justice to another occasion off the Alaskan coast when a Negro hunter in the Minnie became a problem. Always kicking about the grub, finally he refused duty. An hour or so later he and a Swede made off in one of the boats, and Jacobson pursued in another. It was in a bank of low-lying mist that the pursuers eventually sighted the fugitives, and the colored man opened up with a rifle.

CECIL CLARK Feature

"Alright, let him go," said Jacobson. "He'd only be more trouble in the ship. Besides, we've got his 50 skins." The Negro and his pal apparently reached the Alcutians in safety.

It was sometimes in after years that old Viktor Jacobson used to tell of colorful mo-ments when the sealers relaxed at some oldtime Russian settlement in Alaska, whirling the buxom girls (a mixture of Muscovite and Tongam) under flaring naptha lanterns to the Jigging tunes of accordion, mouth organ and fiddle. With the rum rated around 40 overproof, sea boots became dancing alippers.

There Were Tragedies

There were, too, occasional tragic notes, when boats failed to return to the mother ship, being either swallowed in fog or bat-tered by a quick rising sea. Most lost sealers were lucky enough to be picked up by another ship, and in some rare instances crossed the Pacific in their dories to reach Japan. Once a cook, disillusioned with life after a bout with the bottle, swallowed Lysol, and occasionally the odd man was lost overboard.

"The Thing" got one or two small boats; a reported marine monster that came surging up from the depths to overturn and smash the sealing boats. It was probably a killer whale, though some reckoned it was a giant manta. Death on a voyage usually meant a burial at sea, for by treaty, Canadians had to stay 60 miles off shore. A shore burial would have cut into the short sealing asseen.

cut into the short scaling season.

Capt. Jacobson once faced such a dilemma, but adjusted it to everyone's satisfaction. Seems that one or two of his Indian crewmen Seems that one or two of his Indian crewmen had brought along their wives. Usually as handy as men aboard ship, one was a young klootchman called Amy. One morning off the Aleutians came word from below that Amy was ill. A day or two later, for some unaccountable reason, she died. Mingled with the mourning cries of the men of Clayoquot, was the sterner intimation that they had to go the sterner intimation that they had to go home. Amy, it seems, had to be buried in her native village in sight of Cat Face Mountain. No other place would do.

Jacobson, just arrived on the scaling grounds, could see his season's profits vanishing. So he proposed an alternative. He vowed that when the season was over. Amy would be buried in her home plot. Puzzled as to how this could be affected, the braves weren't left long in doubt,

Body in Bags

Amy, it seems, would be sort of pickled, then buried for a time on the shores of Uni-mak Island. When the season's catch was all salted below decks, they'd pick up her remains and take them to Clayoquot.

Seems however in the first instance Amy had to be salted down; and staying his stomach with a couple of healthy slugs of rum, skipper Jacobson cut Amy up and salted her down in gunny sacks!

When a boat's crew went to bury her above the Unimak shoreline, however, a couple of giant Kodiak bears—they stand about 13 feet high—disputed their right to land.

As they had no guns, only spears and axes, the landing party gave way; especially as in unaccusted fashion the bears came down to

However, a mile or two further away the men accomplished their mission. True to his word, Jacobson recovered the remains on his way south, but at Clayoquot there was such a sea running that a couple of the landing canoes upset. Nothing for it but to go on to cances upset. Nothing for it but to go on to Victoria. However, with a hint of the bright lights, the disposition of Amy seemed furthest from the crew's mind. Once ashore they promptly got drunk, and it was left to Jacobson to arrange Amy's burial which, he remembered, cost him $90.

It was finally on the fangs of a reef in the same Unimak Pass that the Minnie left her bones, after which Capt, Jacobson acquired the Casco, once used by Robert Louis Stevenson in the south seas.

Then 14 years old, the Casco was a fore and aft schooner, built at Oakland in 1878, and fairly palatial below decks with beveled builthead mirrors and whipcord upholstery. Her original cost was said to be $40,000.

Author "a Crank"

Rated (in 1879) first pleasure yacht to sail from San Francisco to Hawaii, it was in June, 1888, that the famed Scottish author chartered her for $300 a month from Dr. Sam Merritt of San Francisco. "Doc" Merritt appears to have been a Babbitt-like clot, remembered best for his classic description of Stevenson: "Some crank who writes books," he said, "wants to hire her; but if he has money he must be alright."

Eventually after about six months, RLS found the charter fee a little rich for his blood, so turned her back to her owner, in favor of Buried eventually on a mountain top" un-der a wide and starry sky," his coffin, you'll be interested to know, was covered by a flag from the Casco.

From the south seas the trim little ship passed into the hands of Victoria's sealing skipper Dick Folger (for $7,000), and later

Victor Jacobson got her for around $1,300.

Jacobson for a time abandoned his independent operation, to put in with a sealing company. Came a financial pinch that required liquidation of some of the company's assets, and Jacobson lost the Casco in the shuffle-a deal that irked him to the end of his days. Came then a rather queer coincidence, for

If you're a Stevenson fan and remember the plot of "The Wrecker," you'll no doubt recall how the ship Flying Scud was wrecked on a Pacific atoll with a load of opium. Remember how the little schooner North Creina took ber how the little schooner Norsh Creina took Loudon Dodd and his group to the scene? That was really the Casco that Stevenson described, especially the part about the hurricane that tested the Norsh Creina from truck to bilge, causing Loudon Dodd to fervently remark, "God bless every man that swung a mallet on that tiny and strong hull."

Casco Carried Opium

Well, here in Victoria, three years after Stevenson's death in the Samoan islands, by Stevenson's death in the Samoan islands, by strange quirk of fate the Casso had a real life connection with opium. A little syndicate used her for running the poppy juice out of here in 187! Later, passing from hand to hand, she was a fishing boat around 1912, and in Vancouver (around 1915) a training craft for Sea Cadein. Which is a switch from opium in June, 1919, she was wrecked off the Kolyna River on the coast of Siberia. A party of American placer miners abound her were rescued by the U.S. cutter Boar and

It was 71 years ago that skipper Jacobson, in one of his prosperous moments, built the big, old family home that stands today on Head Street fronting West Bay. In the mode of the day, it had an upstairs lookout tower where a mariner could survey the passing harbor craft.

It was here that daughter Eva Marie and sons Otto and Victor were born. Though the sons are now dead, Eva is still bright and full of memories. She told me the other evening of memories. She told me the other evening how her dad named a schooner after her, and when the sealing fleet used to come in past Race Rocks she would stand out at Macaulay Point to spot the Eva Marie. When it passed her, close in, she'd tear back to West Bay to greet her dad when his ship tied up to the float in front of the house. When the crew bundled up a few belongings and headed up to the Esquimalt car line, she and her brothers would explore the Eva Marie's galley, to come up with cans of thick sweet condensed milk up with cans of thick sweet condensed milk which they'd smear on hard tack, then sit in a row on the main boom and munch.

No Land-Lover

She told me they had a ship's cat on board who was soared stiff of land. Once, when she took it ashore, it swam straight back to the schooner, and scrambled up the anchor chain

In those days, she told me, there was a shed at the head of the landing to store seal-shed at the head of the landing to store seal-skins, above it a sail loft. These links with the past went years ago.

An interesting experiment in shore-side living came about in 1913 when Capt. Jacob-son bought the old Skeena River sternwheeler Distributor, from which the engines had been removed to power another Distributor away up on the MacKenzie River.

Capt. Jacobson moored the hull alongside the home float and for a time the whole family took up their abode in it. With all modern conveniences, many a party was held in the main saloon, motherly Minnie Jacobson passing around the cake and sandwiches. Father always made the coffee in his own inimitable way; and to this day his daughter aweurs it was best coffee she ever tasted in her life

The old Distributor has been sunk in the bay for many years now, but parts of the hull can still be seen at low tide. Somehow a pathetic end for a craft that fifty-odd years ago, hustled supplies up the swift and tricky

It was at this same West Bay, hard by Work Point barracks, that Mrs. Sweeney once saw a man keelhauled. Apparently Frank, the five-feet-two Dutch cook in the Eva Marie ("I got darty dollars a month") was an awful man for the booze, and finally one day, as the schooner swung at onchor, the hungry crew decided on action. Frank, drunk in his bunk, had to be taught a lesson.

Hauling him up on deck, they fished a heavy rope under the keel from port to star-board, hound the violently protesting Frank to it and threw him overboard. Then all hands

An Energy-Builder And Versatile Fruit

"And Noah planted a vineyard . . . " Even long before Noah, man cultivated the grape. Besides pressing its juices, he dried this delectable fruit in the sun. Raisins are almost as old as eating. Subjects of King David are said to have brought donkeys laden with cheeses and raisins to pay their taxes. Nowadays the department of national revenue would take a dim view of such payment but in the kitchen, raisins still hold an honored place.

Today more than ever, our cook books abound in uses for the raisin. We munch them between meals for energy (and their lovely taste), we nurture our children on their iron endowing virtues. Besides iron they are chock full of natural fruit sugars. We use them to add flavor, variety and sweetness to all kinds of food. We use them to give a "company touch" to plain dishes. Most of the raisins we use here come to us from south of the border where the hot California sun endows them with energy and sweetness. This fruit of the sun, these delicious little nuggets of goodness and energy, flatter the flavor of every meal.

What better than pie? Surveys show that it is a man's choice for dessert. Today let's make it raisin pie... the old fashioned kind, made with the large, seeded raisins.

And here is some Cradle Counsel... a boon to the two-yearf-old-plus baby is the raisin. For raisins add an exciting new element to eating that every child loves. The flavor of a raisin is pure sweetness... a kissed-by-the-sun sort of sweetness manufactured in Nature's own workshop, and the right kind of sweetness to satisfy baby's avid sweet-tooth. Besides refueling baby's energy and fron supply, raisins are a fine introduction to texture in food, necessitating extra exercising of teeth and gums. And when your

To Serve the Feverish Miners She Braved the Formidable Horn

When James Marshall discovered gold, January 24, 1848, at Sutter's Mill on California's American River, he set the world

The rush of miners and camp followers changed the picture of shipping along the whole Pacific coast. Before gold rush days shipping was limited to the needs of traders - Astor interests on the Columbia, Hudson's Bay forts from the Columbia to Alaska, California hides and tallow to Europe, and wheat to the Russians at Sitka.

But now, in 1849, gold brought ships from the Atlantic to San Francisco Bay by the Cape Horn route—steam and sail—some deep-water carriers, others for coastal trade and still other ships for river

One of the early arrivals was the New York built Commodore bought by the Pacific Mail Company in 1851 for the Paumma-San Francisco run. Barquentine rigged she sailed to the Pacific most of the way. At a later date, April, 1858, she ferried the first gold-seekers from the Golden Gate to Esquimalt. Gold in British Columbia, the Fraser, Cariboo and Wildhorse Creek brought another surge of shipping to serve the mines and miners. California had settled from a golden excitement to an economy based on her land—wheat from the valleys, cattle from her hills—and deep son ships came to take her harvests away.

Lumber, timber and pilings and spars, were moving from Puget Sound, not only to California but to the rest of the world and the tall masts of wind ships made forests in the waters of Puget Sound, the Columbia, and Es-

One ship worthy of very special mention was the Wilson G. Hunt, the only ship on the Pacific to have been powered by a steeple engine; the only ship to have splashed up and down the Fraser, the Columbia and the Sacramento Rivers, to have salled Puget Sound, the Strait of Georgia and Juan de Fuca as well as half a dozen passages between Canada and California.

California.

The Wilson G. Hunt was built at New York as a Coney Island excursion steamer. But she never sailed to Coney Island. The gold rush caught her, and she was sent to San Francisco by way of Cape Horn. She made the trip in 322 days. Registered 450 tons, she was 185.5 feet long, beam 25.9 feet with a hull depth of 6.8 feet. Her single cylinder angine, 36-inch bore, 106-inch stroke, was rated at 150 horaspower.

Steeple engines were so-called because the cross-head, connecting rod and crank were vertically above the huge cylinder, rather than vertically above the huge cylinder, rewer than offset through the more conventional walking beam. The steeple-like housing above the paddle boxes of the Wilson G. Hunt sheltered this mechanism. Steeple engines, like all one cylinder jobs, could stop on dead centre, something the engineer made every effort to avoid unless he wanted to lever the piston off centre with a long bar shoved through the paddle have

The Wilson's appointments have been described thus: "Her white enamelled cabin was with commendable restraint—set off with just enough gold leaf to be neat, but not too gaudy, and the stained glass windows in the monitor of her main cabin were things of heauty."

The photograph of the Wilson G. Hunt, taken as she rode in quiet waters, creates wonder that a crew could be found willing to expose themselves in such a long slim ship (herring-butted is the sailor's term) to the

Did she round the Horn or sneak through Magelian Strait (the New York-built Surprise did in 1856) to call at Punta Arenas? Was enough known of Smythe Channel so she could creep north, sheltered by islands, for nearly 600 miles and escape the wrath of the southern seas? And ports of call along the Pacific Coast—which ones?

Details of the voyage are sketchy. She left New York early in 1850 to arrive at St, Georges, Bermuda, a week later with her upper works washed away. After repairs she put into other ports, then to Montevideo where she laid up for nearly three months for re-pairs and the arrival of a new crew—the first crew by this time had had enough!

The voyage, 322 days, is a long one, especially when the Flying Cloud and other California clippers salled the same route in fewer

In 1851, the Wilson G. Hunt, in the Sagramento River trade, was reputed to have gitted the pockets of her owners with more than a million dollars.

Another gold rush, 1858, brought her to British Columbia where she plied the Fraser for a few months, but trade slackened as the first shallow claims became exhausted, the upriver placers were not yet discovered and she was sailed south to San Francisco again.

After a year of idleness at Victoria she was sold to the Oregon Steam Navigation Company for service between Portland and the Cascadas where she coined money again. In 1865 she was rebuilt at Portland and in 1869 1865 she was rebuilt at Portland and in 1869 returned to Puget Sound. Later she was back at San Francisco. In 1878, Captain John Irving brought her to Victoria again where she was registered under the British flag, and still capable of clipping along at 15 knots, was placed on the Victoria-New Westminster run.

Joseph Spratt bought the Wilson G. Hunt in 1881 for the East Coast mail run between Victoria and Nanaimo. She worked until in 1890 she sank at her moorings at Victoria.

Much has been told about shanghaied crews and iron-fisted bucko mates. But not enough of the happy ships. The Euterpe was one. They sailed through every ocean from the 1850s into the First World War.

Another ship, the Silbertorn, on which my triend, the late Bill Kelly, served his time to friend, the late Bill Kelly, served his time to become her second mate, was a regular Cape Horner, usually from Liverpool to San Francisco, Portland or the Fraser (Islander, May 14, 1961). He wrote in later years of his ship, a few miles west of the Hemite Islands, which lie a bit west of the Horn, making leeway, the wind driving her towards the rocks that have taken so many good ships.

In later years, Bill and the Old Man (a term of respect in Bill's vocabulary) lived, after they left the sea, a hundred miles apart in the foothills of the California Sierra. When the captain's wife died Bill went down taking with him and flowers from the array in his with him, not flowers from the array in his own yard, but wild things gathered from the banks of a little creek that wandered through his land, the kind the Old Lady loved, branches of white June Berry, tall spikes of blue Lupine and clusters of blush-tinted Azaleas.

"When my old skipper saw me his tired shoulders straightened," Bill said, "and he spoke in the tone of Cape Horn days."

"You'll come with me, boy!" Together we went to her grave.

A number of counterfeits of the Ryukye Islands overprint, Scott No. 16, have been offered for sale recently, according to information given by Nina S. and Fred Thomas of Oakland, Calif., who assisted Minoru Sera in compiling his handbook of the Ryukye Islands.

One of the main differences to look for is in the ink used in printing the counterfeits. Original overprints, when studied under black light, are slightly blackbrown in appearance with a small aura caused by oil in the ink creating a diffusion around the type imprint. The counterfeits have no aura and are definitely a dead no aura and are definitely a dead blue-black in appearance.
One stamp of one pair (they are

Another pair has a counterfeit of stamp No. 71 of the third printing in which the "KAI" or kanji character that appears as a reverse "S" (upper left) is missing. This error in the original sheet was discovered by the Thomases and so far only about a dozen sheets have been found.

The third printing type of No. 16 is different from the type of the first and second printings of this 10 yen overprint, and this counterfeit which would be Type C, or the third printing, has a mixture of types that places it more in the category of Type B of the second printing.

Among the Toughest Fighting Men Of Any Army and of Any Time

GURKHAS are BACK Once again the indomitable Gurkha is fighting, with his British ally, where the going is toughest. This time it's in the jungles of Malaysia where the Indonesian guerrillas have been attempting to penetrate the defences of the newly-formed confederation.

The Gurkhas are from Nepal, India's mountainous frontier country where Everest shoulders the high cloud.

From Leonard James Harper, now living in Victoria, and whose career brought him into close association with these splendid troops come these few facts:

For almost 150 years the tough Gurkha soldier has fought in the British Army. The association started in 1815, soon after the conclusion of the wars between Nepal and the Honorable East India Company. British officers in the field had been quick to appreciate the fierce quality of the Gurkha under the bitterest battle conditions. When the peace was signed three volunteer regiments of Gurkhas were recruited for inclusion in the Imperial forces.

When the Sepoy Mutiny burst upon India, Jang Bahadur, ruler of Nepal, offered to send troops to aid his new-made friends of the East India Company. But it was only after the disaster at Delhi, which fell to the mutineers, that the British accepted his aid. Immediately 3,000 Gurkhas marched to battle, with another 1,000 close on their heels.

Jang Bahadur was anxious to coment friendly relations with the British. When Lucinow was besieged he led a further contingent of 8,000 troops to help in its relief. He died in 1877.

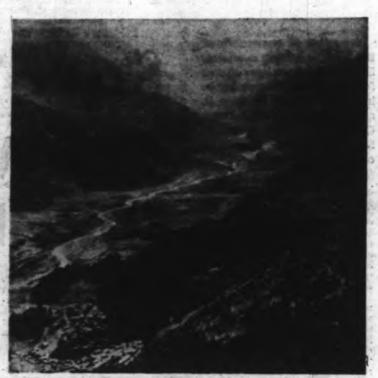

In the two World Wars hundreds of thousands of Gurkhas have fought on British fronts, in the jungles, on the desert and in the mad of France and Flanders.

The loyalty of these troops is phenomenal, their courage never to

The loyalty of these troops is phenomenal, their courage never to be doubted. In the Far East during the Second World War 300 Gurkhes, captured by the Japanese when their ammunition was exhausted and many were wounded, refused to deny their allegiance to the British Crown even in the face of execution. All were beheaded.

Where Have They Gone? The Old-Time Readers

Many years ago, when books and literacy were scarce, a single book would be passed around a group of people and anyone capable of exchanging the printed symbol for the spoken word would stand and read aloud to the others. The reader was forced to read slowly, sometimes imaginatively, to utter each word. Unfortunately this custom of group reading and listening has all but disappeared. Now each person finds and reads his own book, magazine or the like, not forced to a slow gait by listeners, but able to read just as quickly as his mind will absorb the material content. Emphasis is no longer placed on sound, character, volume or pace, quickening or lessening the speed to heighten or calm the action of a story. Now, with the huge volumes of printed matter to choose from, the emphasis is on speed.

Courses on speed reading are being offered, school programs geared to prodigious amounts of background reading; the object is to skim over material for its message and not its words. Of course, all this is understandable in a world changing so rapidly: more and more to learn, hence more and more to read. Special material is being published much faster than the specialist can read it. More and more time is being devoted to study, less time to doing; more years of learning for fewer years of working. The time is approaching when the professional will likely go to school two years for every one year he will later practice his calling. All this time it will be read, read more, read faster. And all this hurrying through and past the printed word distresses me, and others like me, in the category known as the "Slow Reader."

Slow. Not incapable so much, but slow;

Slow. Not incapable so much, but slow; slow to skip on to the next paragraph, page, book; slow to give up the habit of going back to a phrase that struck one in the previous sentence, slow to go on until one has digested that phrase, tasted and savored the sound and the look of the words; and slow to put aside the book ready for the next; but rather, reluctant to come to the end of the work of Steinbeck, Wouk or some other author who speaks to one in the words that he knows the writer loves as much as he.

writer loves as much as he.

And I do love those words. The pleasure I find in reading comes not so much from the information derived, or the plot or the characters, although these are basic to the value of the work, but from the manner in which the author speaks from his pages: rudely when his characters are rude, soothingly when they are sophisticated. Reading is one of the best ways in which a person may live a life broader than his immediate surroundings, and for this reason I firmly believe the words of the college professor who told us that everything we read changes us, that we are not the same people after we read something that we were before.

To what degree it changes us depends upon the amount we absorb from reading. When one takes a book, and mentally clips and chops it until only the message speaks to him, he has lost the opportunity of living the story as the author intended it to be lived. Indeed, he hasn't taken the time to properly consume the book. He hasn't embraced the words!

The other day an acquaintance told us that she did not like certain authors because of the amount of descriptive detail they wrote into their stories. In general, these books were of no interest if the plots didn't move. She would find herself skimming over, as she herself said, "the dull details to get to the interesting parts." My argument exactly: why read novels at all if only for the purpose of extracting action and plot? Television accomplishes this for you with far less effort.

If one feels compelled to know the plot of a certain book, reviews, and in some cases, the back cover of the paper-back edition should produce all necessary information.

Also, the pleasure reader, and perhaps the pleasure writer, the novelist, faces a probability of being crushed by the onslaught of overpublication of technical information, and worse—the bushels of advertising tripe burdening the mails. It one were to read everything that brims the mail box each day with the speed that I prefer for maximum reading enjoyment, he'd have little time for reading anything else. Instead he skims through the advertising, through the newspaper, and, if he has time, through a paperback or two. Soon he will give up the habit of reading anything at all purely for the pleasure of reading. Perhaps the novelist's work faces a future similar to that of another dying breed, the Owner's Manual. Know anyone who repairs his own car or his own washer anymore? Maybe soon you won't know anyone who reads novels anymore either.

A bleak picture? A tempest in a teapot? Quite likely, but it is my lashing out against those people who jeer at me for taking two weeks of my spare-time in reading a good novel, verbally beating me about the ears for taking so long to absorb something that they themselves worked over in a couple of hours. It upsets me to think that people are too busy, too hurried or just too lazy to derive the sheer pleasure of wandering through the words so carefully and painstakingly arranged by some writer, who, in desperation, sells himself for only 75 cents on the drugstore book carousel.

People have little time for reading now; they will have less in the future. But while we have authors, good ones, who turn out books in an imaginative, creative manner, shouldn't we at least give them some of our time to read their books, slowly, at talking speed, and imagine the voices of the characters, and follow the writer's finger as he points out the things of interest along the way, and listen while he describes the objects of his stories? I'm sure he'd appreciate it.

HOW GROWS THE SEED OF CREATIVENESS?

JOHN ROBSON Looks Into KOESTLER

There has recently been a lot of speculation about artistic creativity, possibly reflecting a fear that the springs of originality are drying up, but more likely reflecting a pseudo-democratic belief that if anybody can be creative, everybody can—a sort of "Who the heck is Berlioz" attitude.

THE ACT OF CREATION by Arthur Koostler; Hutchinson Group; $10.

Writers and painters in particular have been besieged with requests for descriptions of what happens when they "create"; not surprisingly, their answers are usually off-hand and seldom satisfactory.

In the meantime, in laboratory and study, "life" scientists and psychologists have been doing considerable research into questions closely connected with creativity. The connections have not been established, however, and the results have not been generally presented to the layman. These formidable tasks have

These formidable tasks have been undertaken by Arthur Koestler in The Act of Creation, a heavy book which derives its weight from an almost incredible number of valuable insights and scientific findings.

His basic argument is revealed in an illustration at the beginning which looks more like a stray from an alchemical text than the useful guide it is. The diagram's message is that there is a basic pattern common to artistic creation, scientific discovery, and comic invention. This pattern has as its dominant element a transference of consciousness from one plane of reference to another; that is, a sudden leap which places a fact or a statement or a process in a new context, thus revealing relations previously undreamt of,

Actually, "undreamt of" is just the wrong description, for the process, Koestler argues, is intimately connected with dream, the unconscious, and non-rational mental flow, all of which free us from restrictive habits of mind. Probably no part of the book is more immediately persuasive than the sections based on statements by scientists and others about the role played by the sub-conscious in their discoveries.

The explanation of comedy in these terms is, I believe, the best ever formulated, although as in all comic theories, the jokes tend to flatten out under the knife of

The second part of the book, I was warned and I pass on the warning, is difficult reading, as it requires a familiarity with devel-opments in the life sciences. I felt stilly when puzzling over details which must be elementary to the informed, and I resolved once more to keep abreast at least of the new scientific generalizations. To that end I picked up one of the best guides to current trends, the Penguin Science Survey, divided into parts A and B, the latter dealing with the life sciences, the former with the rest (both $1.65). As I expected, I was fascinated and sure enough. Part A has an essay on scientific discovery—and I was back with

Obession:

The reading public has enjoyed a curiously inverted relationship with novelist Nabokov. With some exceptions we read him backwards, back from the maturity of the present to the years when, as a beginner, he was sharpening the tools of his craft. Did he ever write a first novel? Perhaps he's saving it for us for the last. In between the production of new ones, the earlier Russian-language stories, like this one now 35 years old, are being dug out of the barrel.

And what a barrel! This novel, for instance, in form, in development, in style, in its language (to be sure the author knows more about English than he did 10 years ago), is superior to the famous Lolita-and in its way, in the depiction of an unbridled and helpless passion, as much of a shocker.

The hero of this brief and gripping tale is a boy and man named Luzhin, seen first in and near what was St. Petersburg, and eventually in Berlin. Or perhaps the hero is, rather,

For Nabokov has given us another one of those extremes of character in whom there is no compromise, no diversion from the possessive single track, a man as committed to chess as Balzac's old provincial Grandet was to the love of gold, as Van Gogh was to painting, as Ahab was to the White

Luzhin is the son of a writer, so the story goes. He is grossly ill-fitted for the life his father plans for him, and for his dreary existence at school. He is irresponsive. He avoids sports. He sits by himself in an impassive silence; he is a kind of tabula rasa—a tablet silence; he is a kind of tabula rasa—a tablet not only unmarked but, you begin to fear, unmarkable. Then one day he picks up a box of chesamen. Was there some fateful affinity, was it because somehow he must be awakened to something, was it mere chance? Then chance bears an awful responsibility. For with the little figurines at hand, and the fascinating board—a tablet with irresistible markings—he plays his first games with a pretty sunt and he plays his first games with a pretty aunt and soon outdistances her; then with a companion of hers and beats him, too.

I've just come across anof those books that other mark an epoch in my life, similar to those marked by McGonagle's poetry and Dr. Sylvanus Stoll's Self-and-Sex Series. I heartily recommend, even to those who, like me, are not devotees of rod and gun, L. L. Bean's Hunting, Fishing and Camping.

Bean's masterwork may, unhappily, be out of print, for the copy I have is dated 1942, published by the Dingley Press, Inc., of Freeport, Maine. Another difficulty is that the full flavor of the work depends on its surprising and usually irrelevant illustrations.

The book & designed, says Mr. Bean, to be read in 85 minutes, but the information is so valuable that he provides duplicates of five of the most important chapters at the end, to be cut out and carried always for ready reference. Prenumebly the memoranda pages at the back are also to be cut out.

Looking for that place to go (actually, it's bound to be in Maine), you'll find recipes for camping, including Bean's treat-ment of beans (which takes two days, so take something to nibble on in the mountime). Also, make sure you take lump sugar, be-cause, as the author says, "if you drop some on the ground it is easy to pick up."

The L.L. Bean factory in Freeport, Maine, must get along with-out much supervision, for it's clear from the range of the au-thor's slaughter that he's in field and stream for a good part of the year. I thought Mrs. Bean might year. I thought Mrs. Bean might be in charge, but she makes a be-lated appearance on page 86, the proud conqueror of an 8 ft. sail fish. And Bean Jr. and another sprout appear in other places.

Of the pictures, my favorites are a close-up of a moose indelicately dripping delicious lily pads and roots from its sensitive maw; and roots from its sensitive maw; and a girl, bestuiful and triumphant, smiling at a dead bird in hand, over the caption "A bird dog is not absolutely essential when hunting Ruffed Grouse." I'm informed reliably that the picture of two pipe-smoking hunters tragging a deer is just as foolish to those who know.

Those who don't will probably settle for this starting statement:
"Maine issued 163,641 hunting and fishing licences last year (1941).

VIVID HISTORY

THE DEFENDED BORDER (Upper Canada and the War of 1912), edited by Merris Zaslew. The MacMilian Company of Canada. 270 pp.

The Defended Border is a presentation of the Ontario Historical Society to mark the 150th anniversary of the end of the War of 1812. Unlike most works of a similar nature, however, it accomplishes something that most students of history have come to believe is almost impossible: that is, the production of a readable account of one of the most important wars in Canadian history.

The Defended Border is a collection of writings of military and demic historians, of journalists and politicians relating to the political and military battles of 1812.

Its chapters not only contain vid accounts of how Canadians vivid accounts of how Canadians rallied to defend their country against the invading Americans but document in great detail through the use of footnotes and maps the background to their viotories and defeats.

It is a book which can be recommended to all interested in Canadian history, whether they be young or old. So well written is it that school children will be able to enjoy it equally as much as the adult reader. It should be

Some novelists place their reliance on action. Iris Murdoch builds hers on analysis—the analysis and self-analysis of her characters. Action, when it occurs, is brief, sometimes violent, but invariably brushed aside when it is over so that the participants may resume their deadly dissection of themselves and each other.

Though Miss Murdoch is highly regarded in her native Britain, she has never taken real root on this side of the ocean. Perhaps the answer lies in the pedagogic bloodlessness of her novels. The lady is a formidable figure in England, a one-time philosophy don at Oxford University who set out to show novelists how novels should be written. Her own have been models of craftsmanship, written in lapidary style and heavily freighted with symbolism, with the characters subjected to prismatic shifts exposing their defects and weaknesses.

The settings are always presented with hairline

In this new novel the narrator, a priggish artist turned 40, returns to his family home for his mother's funeral, and immediately becomes caught up in the conflicts tearing his brother's menage apart. The brother, Otto, is a crude, oatish fellow who has long since become estranged from his wife. Also in the circle are Otto's nubile daughter, an arrogant young male assistant, and an Italian maid.

Miss Murdoch moves these characters about like pieces on a chess board. Unexpected relationships are revealed in her cool, dispassionate, slightly mocking dialogue. Emotions are stated rather than demonstrated. Otte's wife, Isabel, calmly introduces the narrator to the situation by saying: "Here we've all been destroying ourselves and each other. We've become monkey men and spider women."

As the tale unfolds, it becomes apparent that all the characters have been engaging in below-the-stairs liaisons with each other. The narrator, something of a prude, is startled by each new affair. Miss Murdoch is merely pre paring to indulge her penchant for analysis. Revelation is inevitably followed by explanation. The tone is always rational, even when Otto's daughter and the Italian girl are fighting on the floor like Kilkenny cats. The fight ends with Flora snipping off a lock of the maid's hair, thus presenting us with a symbol of a severed lock in place of the severed head in the earlier Murdoch novel of that name.

The trouble with all this is that one never gets the feeling that human beings are involved. Miss Murdoch's desterity in manipulating Her dramatis personae deprives them of all inner initiative. They become mere instruments inher artful hands. The interested reader can puzzle out the symbolism, admire the construction and economy of means, and linger over the apposite allusions in the dialogue. The etiolated characterization turns it all into an academic exercise.

The symbolical note is carried through to the very end. When the narrator finally plucks up the courage to declare his love for the Italian girl and she accepts him ("as strange as Eve to the dazed awakening of Adam"), his first action is to take an apple and eat it. Figure out this reverse twist if you can. I'm afraid Iris Murdoch remains what she has been till now-caviar for the few initiates.

Yet, though events have passed by many of the facts and some of the assumptions, this work still stands as the most searching ex-amination in the field to date. It, is a challenge to those now charged with examining the Federal-Provincial tax structure to search as deeply into the unequal effects of national policies on Canada's five projects. Canada's five regions.

Glazebrooke's History of Trans-ortation is hardly less important, in a sense, for it goes deeply into one of the three "basic decisions" that set Canada on the road to nationhood—railway building, western settlement and tariff pro-tection for industry.

Professor Warkentin's volume is a new compilation of the reports and comments of early explorers of the west. Even it has some bearing on the present ferment, for the generous sprinkling of French names like La Verendrye, among the English and Scots, is a reminder that the mak-ing of Canada was, over time, a team job.

The new volumes bring to 15 the total now available in the Carleton Library—edited by a distinguished team from Carleton University, Ottawa,

At these prices, one cannot hest-tate to recommend them, espe-cially for the home library of any-one with a friendly interest in his country's background.

The Dully Colonist, Sunday, October 4, 1964-Page 15

The opening movement of October is a slow and quiet one, with Channel Rock bright under a blue sky. The ancient tree stumps beyond the orchard flame vine-scarlet against the broadleaf gold of maples standing like candles in the wood. When the sea is not shouting there is a great silence everywhere for most of the birds have gone. Only the whispering of winter wrens or cry of a Stellar's jay break the stillness.

Even on dull days the maples make sunshine and on bright ones I spend every possible moment outside in golden warmth. Sometimes I feel that it is almost more than I can bear to have the darkness of winter come down again so soon. Spring and summer pass in a flash of lovely light, but the coastal country winter lingers long -or seems so. Even now there is only a vague dawnlight when I get up at six and when I come in from work twelve hours later the moth of dusk is flying. I shiver a little then - and not just because the house is chilly. Warmth and light - from the sun, from the human heart - what plant or person can flower without them? But not without rain or tears either. To live without pain would be to live without a vital, exhibarating part of life which can give us fully as much as joy.

One October night some years ago I went to look at the stars and stepped out into a world of wonder. The whole sky was filled with thousands of flashing meteors. I counted over 500 in lifteen minutes and almost unscrewed my head trying to look everywhere at once. Most of the meteors seemed to be headed south, but a few went east and north, fewer still west. From where I stood it looked though the blasting-off platform for them all was right above my house

This celestial shower lasted for hours; one of the most glosious spectacles I have ever w nessed. How fortunate I was to view it a sy from smoke and buildings. I stood in clear, startit darkness and saw how the meteors seemed to rest on the mountain tops: fike silver torches glowing on the peaks to mark the way for heavenly travellers. I stood surrounded by silence; silence made deeper by by the swift, noiseless flashing of those silver beams. I had the same sensation then as when I see water moving and cannot hear it. There is a mysterious beauty there that fills me with wonder and delight.

At the full moon of this month the grou are supposed ot go slightly crazy, flying maily around and striking against trees and even against houses. At least, so I've been told. In November the chickadees are said to do much the same thing. But these birds that I have known have all been practical, busy neighbors Gilean Douglas'

In late October the sun swings low over Marina and the grass is never dry after the heavy dews of night. It adds its crystal note to golden days and catches the last light of evening as it falls across my home. The air has mist in it again and great streamers divide the mountains:

I remember a woman up in Seymour Inlet telling me that the coast reminded her so much of Scotland. October always brings back to my own mind a painting from my childhood of autumn in the Scottish highlands. There are the same colors of bush and tree climbing

Also that same touch of wikiness which companions the peace of autumn; distinguishing it from the light, capricious quietude of spring or the lush content of summer. From flowers in sheltered places to snow on the moutnains, the whole year is here and now.

Is all this concern with the beauty of simple things merely escape, as a summor tourist suggested? Surely not, for I feel that I am running towards life instead of away from it. I am searching for the very source of being in all its manifestations. I have left nothing in the city which cannot be done better by others. I have brought the two things with me in which I am, perhaps, a little shilled. I can work harder here then there and the results are better. I have no superfluous telsure, but yet am, I hope, not one of those of whom it has been said: "These, too, are triflers who have wearied themselves in life by their activity."

Again came a cry for workers, The Coloniat giving an editorial boost: "Laboring men accustomed to railroad work would do well to keep this employment in view, for it means steady work at 30 cents an hour for the 11-hour working day—pretty good pay—$3.30 a day." day.
